Overview

The Disability Tax Credit is one of the several credits that are offered by Canada Revenue Agency. Yet, many Canadians are not aware of the Disability Tax Credit and the benefits it provides. The overall process is fairly simple, and once completed, individuals can receive thousands of dollars from Canada Revenue Agency to offset their medical costs.

If you, or a loved one, suffer from any mental or physical condition that slows you down during your day-to-day activities in comparison to the average individual, then you likely qualify.

What is the Disability Tax Credit?

The Disability Tax Credit (also referred to as the disability amount or DTC) is a tax credit that a person, with a qualifying disability, can claim to reduce the amount of income tax one has to pay in a year.

How Does it Work?

Your doctor is required to fill out the Disability Tax Credit form that you pick up from our office or request us to send to you. Based on the information provided on the form by your doctor, we process the application with CRA and make necessary adjustments to your tax returns from previous years. Depending on your case, you can carry back this credit up to 10 years.

You can earn up to $35,000 in refunds.
